Summary of Module

This module examines the creative, commercial and cultural significance of cinema in the UK. It examines key categories and forms of British cinema with special emphasis on low budget, independent filmmaking as an area of specific creative and representational significance. The module will address questions concerning power and authority in British cinema's representations of class, gender, race and national identity. In addition to an analysis of forms and strategies of representation, institutional aspects of funding, production and distribution will be considered.

By the end of the module the student will have an understanding of the UK film environment and British film culture, and will be able to consider his/her own creative practice and professional aspirations in relation to this culture. Students will be encouraged to link their critical reflection with their filmmaking activities in creative practice modules.

Key topic areas:

Industry and Culture. The British film industry and British cinema. Significant institutional factors and strategic approaches concerning the production of films in the UK.

Form. Do British films have distinctive formal characteristics? Realism is examined as a dominant aesthetic and ethical mode in British film culture. Anti-realism, spectacle and formal innovation are considered as alternatives to the realist tradition. Hybridity is considered as a dominant creative tendency.

Genre. Key genres will be examined as a means of focusing on the intertwining relationship between creativity and commerce in UK film culture.

Representation. How is social experience negotiated and re-imagined in British cinema? Class, gender, race and youth will be examined in relation to discourses of national identity.
