Summary of Module

Your module is designed to introduce you literature on contemporary issues affecting accounting. It will require substantial amounts of reading. Your module should also allow you to develop your research and presentation skills.

This module will not have a prescribed content to be covered each time the module is delivered. It is envisaged that the content will alter each time the module is delivered, reflecting the changing nature of the issues currently being debated in academic accounting and the developing research interests of staff involved in the delivery of the module. There will always be five separate issues, which will be considered in each delivery of the module. As an indicative statement of what these issues could be, the following matters have been considered in the past:

1. Transferable skills in accounting.
2. Business ethics and the financial analyst
3. Principles v. Rules
4. Approaches to learning in accounting students
5. Impression management in annual reports
6. Application of IFRS throughout the European Union
7. XBRL and development of an international accounting taxonomy

You will benefit from the research interests of the teaching team. This module is suitable for delivery overseas.
