Summary of Module

This is a continuously assessed module with written and oral assignments. It utilizes integrative assessment with on-going formative assessments based on case studies and presentations relating to their field of study. Practice based learning is utilised through a case study approach.

The assessments and module delivery are designed to encourage the student to undertake reflective practice in terms of their own interpersonal skills.

The module covers the following:

- 1) Planned change: phases, models and development of change theory including Lewin, action research and comparison with emergent approaches.
- 2) Individual and organisational forces influencing motivation to change. Strategies for initiating, stimulating, and facilitating the transformational process, situational variables and their influence on intervention style and techniques. Change-agent skills for successful organisation development programmes.
- 3) Developing skills in self-awareness and reflection. Self-development through disclosure and feedback. Achievement of objectives including personal growth. Constructive communication, problem solving, constructive conflict management. Dynamics of teams and teambuilding in personal development.

The role of leadership in transforming the vision into application. Identifying and developing leadership skills.

Graduate Attributes on completion include:
