Summary of Module

This module invites you to explore how relationships shape health and wellbeing in both personal and professional life, with a strong focus on real work in health education and health promotion. You will look at health in a holistic way, examining how beliefs, values and attitudes influence health-related behaviours for children, families and wider communities. You will be introduced to key models and approaches to health promotion and learn clearly how health education and health promotion differ, and how they work together in practice. Along the way, you will develop up-to-date knowledge of health issues that are highly relevant to future roles with children and families, including mental health, physical activity, nutrition, addiction, wellbeing, and additional support needs, alongside major global, UK and Scottish health policy developments since 2000.

You will evaluate how these settings can support and improve the health of children, families and staff, and you will apply what you learn through group presentations and scenario-based discussions that mirror situations you may face in practice. By the end of the module, you will feel more confident about working with others to promote holistic wellbeing and about using health promotion ideas in your future career with children and families.
