16	General Overview
	Introduction to the Programme
	BA (Hons) Filmmaking & Screen Writing students learn how to make films, and study cinema as art, culture and commerce. The programme is highly distinctive in its offer of a balance of practice and theory that allows students to develop industry-accredited skills whilst pursuing their passion for cinema.
	The programme is designed to produce graduates with specific knowledge and skills concerning filmmaking, cinematic storytelling, and film culture. It provides a subject- focused learning experience whilst also developing students' transferable skills of story-telling, collaboration, and professional communication. The programme has an explicitly international curriculum concerned with a trans-national cultural form and a globalised industry, which is explored in local, regional and national contexts throughout the four years of study.
	Key Features of the Programme
	The first year of the programme prepares students for success by introducing essential skills concerning digital filmmaking and screenwriting. Technical skills are developed in modules covering digital video production, sound recording and editing. Screenwriting skills are developed across a range of production contexts. Students also undertake critical studies that complement practical filmmaking by encouraging the close, detailed analysis of how films are constructed and how a wide variety of films tell stories through techniques of narrative organisation, cinematography, editing and sound.
	In second year, students further develop their creative skills in the contrasting contexts of drama and documentary production; at this level students also benefit from specialised teaching in scriptwriting. Skills of critical analysis, research and writing are developed in film studies modules, with a specific emphasis on innovation and creative achievement and the relationship between craft and cultural artefact. This level also acts as a secure and coherent means of articulation for applicants with advanced standing who wish to undertake a three-year degree course.
	Year 3 allows students to bring together skills that have been developed in previous years and engage in more ambitious filmmaking and scriptwriting projects. Students will be encouraged to develop skills and understanding concerning film-related ethics, business planning, distribution and finance. Modules will address story development, pitching, product marketing and promotion. A key aim of this level is to develop students' awareness and understanding of the professional contexts in which filmmaking creativity is exercised, and student creative work simulates industry practice. A core module covering enterprise and entrepreneurialism in producing enhances students' knowledge and skills concerning employability in the creative industries. Students at this level also have the opportunity to engage with sophisticated theorisations of films and filmmaking and develop knowledge and skills concerning research procedures in preparation for Honours-level research. Further opportunities to develop professional and communication skills are enabled by students choosing to undertake work experience with an appropriate organisation.
	Central to studies in Year 4 (Honours) is the integrated creative research project for which students develop a folio of creative and critical work that provides evidence of a high standard of achievement in areas such as scriptwriting, cinematography, sound, editing, producing, and directing, and theorisation and analysis. The emphasis here is on creative and critical specialisation, enabling a close and deep engagement with areas of personal, intellectual and professional interest. A range of optional modules provides further opportunities for students to dwell in specialist areas of interest, completing a rich undergraduate experience whilst opening the door to professional employment or further study.

Graduation, Progression and Further Study

The combination of specific filmmaking skills, general communication skills, enterprise awareness and professionalisation ensures that students are prepared for suitable employment in the creative industries. Graduates have found employment in technical areas such as camera and sound departments, post-production houses, as production assistants, and as directors. Many graduates continue to work independently as filmmakers and increasingly they set up their own production companies. Some graduates choose to look beyond the creative industries and find graduate-level careers where they can use their skills of research, analysis and presentation. In addition, an honours degree at 2:1 level or above in Filmmaking and Screen Writing is a suitable qualification for progression to a wide range of postgraduate opportunities in Film, Media and Cultural studies. There are also many postgraduate courses in practical film production and screenwriting that are available to graduating students and many continue their studies at UWS.

Students that leave at the end of level 9 to enter employment have the option of continuing to study in order to graduate with Honours. The 60 credit Creative Research Project module is amenable to incorporating professional experience and knowledge, and optional modules may be chosen to suit the circumstances and skillset of the individual.

Learning, Teaching & Assessment

BA (Hons) Filmmaking & Screen Writing engages students in enquiry-based learning in which personal and creative interests are explored and developed in relation to the discipline and rigour of professional and academic contexts and processes. At level 7 practical digital filmmaking is used as a vehicle for students to formulate research questions and to collect and consider information prior to its formulation in writing – treatments, scripts, production diaries – and images – films, storyboards – all of which is done within goal-oriented groups.

This process reoccurs throughout the four years of the programme on practical and theoretical modules in which students explore a wide range of materials and sources, drawn from a range of academic and non-academic sources. There is an integrated approach with a balance between theoretical contextualisation and practice activity alongside the development of both analytical and practical skills in media production.

Learning and teaching methods include: lectures, screenings, demonstrations, tutorials, group and individual project work, multi-media and 'e' learning, and screen practice. A very strong emphasis is placed on students using digital technology across all modules and developing digital expertise and literacy to a professional standard in specific skills areas where appropriate. Students are encouraged to engage in the pedagogical and professional use of social media including, for example, participation in autonomous collaboration platforms such as forums embedded in the Aula VLE, Googledocs, Vimeo, Crowdfunders and Facebook groups. There is a mixture of large and small group and individual learning and teaching situations including tutor-led, student led and independent learning sessions.

The principle of student engagement with their own learning and 'learning from work' is manifested in opportunities that students have to discuss their work with visiting industry professionals during regular master-classes and pitching sessions, formative assessment is often enhanced by the participation of creative professionals. At an advanced level students work closely with academic supervisors and benefit from a one-to-one approach concerning research projects and creative projects. Students determine their own areas of advanced study and practice with the benefit of expert guidance and thus embody the University's commitment to a 'learning democracy'. This blend of methods, from essay-writing to group presentations, to extended investigation and creative production, encourages students to work in flexible, creative and independent ways, showing self-discipline, self-direction and reflexivity which in turn challenges students to initiate, develop and realise distinctive and creative work within various forms of writing and audio-visual production.

Teaching on the programme is informed by the research activity of module tutors who offer expertise based upon backgrounds in creative practice, academic research, and creative practice as research. Students are encouraged to become research-minded in the first modules they take at level 7, including filmmaking modules and in film studies modules which encourage individuals to theorise their own perspectives on the making and consumption of creative artefacts. This research-mindedness connected to creative practice is further developed in modules such as Critical Studies in Film (level 9), which encourage students to discover the value of research for practice. At level 10, the 60 credit Creative Research Project module provides students with an opportunity to fully integrate their creative and critical interests and skills.

17	Graduate Attributes, Employability & Personal Development Planning

Employability is developed throughout the course beginning at level 7 where students gain an insight into the various roles and responsibilities that are common to the film and television industries. At this level and throughout the programme, the key strands of digital filmmaking and screenwriting provide specific teaching designed to develop students' technical, creative, organisational and entrepreneurial skills. Level 9 in particular is designed to provide students with both advanced technical and creative skills, and knowledge and awareness concerning employment and self-employment in the creative industries.

More generally, students have a wealth of opportunities across all learning contexts to develop key skills of information processing and presentation, and equally important soft skills of in interpersonal communication and self-promotion.

Students benefit from visits by speakers from the creative industries and by going out on placements or on class trips to relevant employment sectors, and by participation in student film festivals. Students are encouraged at the earliest stages to promote themselves to the industry by entering work into competitions and festivals and all Honours students submit work for the Showcase which draws industry professionals whilst encouraging students to think of themselves as active participants in a professional creative culture.

The principle of PDP is introduced within core modules as additional hours during level 7 trimester 1, along with study and core skills development. Thereafter PDP is embedded within the core modules of the programme at all levels and specifically built on through additional hours in named core modules. Although PDP is linked to learning outcomes at every opportunity it is predominantly formative but may also draw on assessed activities. The aim is not only to encourage students to develop skills such as numeracy, language, study skills, employability and analytical thought but also to raise their self awareness and confidence through a process of critical reflection and planning.

Modules that have been identified as specific vehicles for PDP and which will have an additional hours allocation are: level 7, Cinema Aesthetics, Introduction to Screenwriting ; level 8, The Short Film Documentary, The Short Film Fiction and Script Analysis; level 9, Digital Video Filmmaking A & B, Critical Studies in Film; level 10, Creative Research Project.

The programme is fully aligned with institutional priorities around the development of graduate attributes and with the institutional policy on personal development planning. The mapping of programme and module learning outcomes and employability-integrated assessment ensures the visibility of graduate attributes, employability and citizenship competencies. Personal development is embedded and explicitly signposted in the curriculum, with students provided with regular opportunities to capture and evaluate progression and development, stimulating reflection, self-regulation and a more constructive engagement with employability. It is recognised that personal development planning is an essential component of lifelong learning and continuing and professional development. To support this activity, all students are provided with access to personal development planning tools and enabled to develop a personal e-portfolio across the programme.

18	Work Based Learning/Placement Details

The School offers a Work Related Learning module which is an option within this programme at level 9 offering students the opportunity of a relevant work experience and application of learning and theory in practice.

This credit-bearing module offers the student two ways to achieve credit. In each case, a notional 35 hours of the total 200 student effort hours are derived from one of the following two routes:

1. Employment Based Work and Learning

The student works in an environment that is relevant to their programme of study in order to meet the module learning outcomes. Employment will normally be organised by the student but some opportunities will be made available via the School including a few offered in co-operation with partner institutions overseas. If the student is already working part time in an area related to their programme of study then, with the approval of the School and in agreement with their employer, they may be able to use that work experience in order to meet the learning outcomes.

Regardless of the method of identification of WBL, the experience must be selected and/or approved based on the University criteria for placement setting and will be governed by a tripartite agreement between the Student, the Employer and the University. This agreement will define the learning outcomes for the experience and confirm elements of support and commitment from all parties. The agreement will be signed by each party prior to commencement of the experience.

2.Supervised Project Work/Industry Brief

The students apply to complete a University based project or a project description set to University standards. Most opportunities will be promoted by the School e.g. special projects for the community or industry. Supervision in this instance is normally provided by a member of academic staff and although much of the work may be for an external client and involve site visits, the preparation and supervision of the project is normally internal to the University.

19	Attendance and Engagement
	In line with the Student Attendance and Engagement Procedure, Students are defined as academically engaged if they are regularly engaged with timetabled teaching sessions, course-related learning resources including those in the Library and on the VLE, and complete assessments and submit these on time. For the purposes of this programme, academic engagement equates to the following: Attending all scheduled lecturers, workshops, seminars and tutorials (unless specifically informed these are optional) and handing in any work required by the module tutors in a timely fashion when asked to do so.
20	Equality and Diversity
	The University's Equality, Diversity and Human Rights Procedure can be accessed at the following link: UWS Equality, Diversity and Human Rights Code. Please detail any specific arrangements for this programme. This should be considered and not just refer the reader to the UWS Equality and Diversity policy. In line with the Equality Act 2010, the curriculum and delivery of Business & Creative Industries programmes are designed to promote the general equality duty, namely to: • Eliminate unlawful discrimination, harassment and victimisation and other conduct prohibited by the Act; • Advance equality of opportunity between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not; and • Foster good relations between people who share a protected characteristic and those who do not. The programme supports equality of opportunity for students from different backgrounds and with different learning needs. Using appropriate platforms, learning materials will be presented electronically in formats that allow flexible access and manipulation of content. The programme complies with University regulations and guidance on inclusive learning and teaching practice. Specialist assistive equipment, support provision and adjustment to assessment practice will be made in accordance with UWS policy and regulations. The School of Media, Culture & Society is committed to enabling all learners, respecting diversity, promoting equality and embedding inclusivity in all aspects of its work. It is fully cognisant of and compliant with relevant external and institutional policy in this area. The University's Equality, Diversity and Human Rights Policy can be accessed at the following link: http://www.uws.ac.uk/equality/ For students studying overseas at our partner institutions, UWS actively encourages wider access and promotes equality and diversity. Our partners are fully committed to the principles and practice of inclusiveness and our programmes are designed to be accessible to all. In practice, we are guided by the University "Equality and Diversity" policy and will be proactive in relation to our international students by seeking to ensure that the content of the curriculum is 'culturally fair' - specifically this will mean selecting learning materials that are meaningful, accessible and relevant to all students regardless of nationality. All members of the programme delivery team are fully committed to the agenda and recognise that it is their duty and responsibility to promote both the practice and spirit of inclusiveness. The programme is open to anyone to any ethnicity, sex, nationality, age, religion, or any other identifying characteristic if they meet the prerequisites for entry.
